Finally, although I do not go into this in any depth, if the moment of death is in suspension, not present, capable of being witnessed, but as if by someone else as the witness is not dead and death permeates ways of thinking and living life, then no other moment is present ei- 1 This is not meant as a complete survey or analysis of this problem - partly at least because I wish to reframe the problem itself, which has largely been dealt with through so-called analytical philosophical conceptions. Finally, understanding these deaths required stepping fully into an eerie otherworld that few people today even know existed.
